Step 1: Making a New Document Right click on the New Image window and select All Images. From the Layers panel, select Create a New Layer for each kind of image in the document. Only change the active layer. If you wish to work on multiple images at the same time, open the New Image window and create a new image for each layer or type of image you wish to work on. Step 2: Laying out your Image It is important to lay out your image in the right order. You can add the layer that should be on the bottom and the layers that should be on the top or left or right sides of the image. The order of the layers determines how the images appear when printed. Most professionals lay out the top layer first. However, if your image has many different objects, or if you want to work on specific parts of the image, you might lay out the bottom layer first. You can change the order of layers using the Layers Panel. Click on the button on the Layers Panel that says Move Down or Up. Step 3: Adding Text to your Image Write down what you want to appear in your image. This text will be your title. You can use the tab over or under each image. Just be sure to keep your text consistent and readable. Add text if you want. You can add a text layer or insert an existing text layer into the layers. For more information about adding text, see the text article on TexTools.org. The alignment of the text is important. You need to make sure that the text is on the right side of the image. You can change the alignment of the text by using the Align Button on the Layers Panel. Step 4: Adding an Effect to Your Image Click the button on the top right of the panel or select one of the Effects on the panel. You can see a preview of each effect in the bottom window. Some of the Effects are only available for certain layers. These Effects are only available for elements that are on that particular layer. For example, some effects like Warp Stylize are only available for the Effects layer that is on the Text layer. Check the boxes if you want to apply this effect to all layers in your image. If you only want to apply this effect to one layer, check that layer only. Use the scroll bar at 05a79cecff

Q: How can I add tabs to my custom navigation controller? I have a custom navigation bar in my app. I wanted to add a couple of buttons to the view. I can't figure out how to add the view as a tab. How can I add a tab to my custom navigation controller? A: You can use this code [self.navigationController setViewControllers:@[controller1,controller2] animated:NO]; Where first controller is your navigationController and second controller is a new view controller A: What you want to do is set a new navigation controller's viewController property to point at your new view controller. However, you cannot do this in Interface Builder, you have to do it in code. Here is how to set the viewController property in code. You should be able to swap this out for setting the viewControllers property with the same code. [UIView transitionWithView:self.navigationController.view duration:0.5 options:UIViewAnimationOptionTransitionFlipFromRight animations:^(self.navigationController.view.controller = self.mySecondController;) completion:^(BOOL finished) { self.navigationController.view.transform = CGAffineTransformMakeRotation(M_PI); }]; The idea is that you start with the nav controller's view controller, and then apply a animation where it removes the old view controller, but leaves the nav bar itself already showing the second view controller. Then you apply a rotation of the nav bar to show the second view controller as if it were the navigation controller's view. sub-trees that represent the final four navigation states (forward, back, right, left). The good news is that we can't add a UITabBarController to every view, because that would make our navigation control layer thicker. So we have to use delegation to communicate between view controllers. In this case, we're just going to use the standard delegate pattern. Anytime you have a delegate, you'll probably also have an implementer protocol. Here's that protocol: protocol UINavigationControllerDelegate : class { func didFinishNavigation(_ navigation: UINavigationController) } This is a standard delegate pattern. You can imagine this as a protocol for the UINavigationControllerDelegate that will describe what the delegate can and cannot do. In our case, we can't do anything but send an action to the delegate. The Delegate Pattern It's important to realize that you can use a class that is not your own, as long as it implements the protocol. We'll use a popular pattern for delegates called Delegate. final class UINavigationControllerDelegate : UINavigationControllerDelegate { var didFinishNavigation: (UINavigationController) -> Void)? public func didFinishNavigation(_ navigation: UINavigationController) { print("Navigation finished.") self.didFinishNavigation?(navigation) } } We say that the didFinishNavigation() function takes one parameter, which is a reference to UINavigationController. When we implement it, we'll send the UINavigationController to our didFinishNavigation function. final class ViewController : UIViewController, UINavigationControllerDelegate { override func viewDidLoad() { super.viewDidLoad() // register as navigation delegate UINavigationControllerDelegate().didFinishNavigation = self.didFinishNavigation } func didFinishNavigation(navigation: UINavigationController) { // pass the navigation controller to the delegate func that should have been called from the view controller navRootView.addSubview(navigation) } } Now whenever our UINavigationControllerDelegate.didFinishNavigation is called, we'll add the UINavigationController view to the view controller.
